I've always loved to draw...

I grew up one of seven kids. Five brothers and a baby sister. I fell 5th in line. And, although we were a tight family and I adore them all it was at times a little overwhelming. A lot of noise, a bit of fighting, and always a game or a party or just neighbors and friends in and out. And so, as a quiet and shy girl I retreated to my room and found comfort in putting pencil to paper and copying photos from anything I could find from TV Guides to magazines. My parents signed me up for private painting lessons when, at 14, I created my first oil painting....on paper....because I didn't know anything about canvas. Since then my passion for drawing and painting and creating grew and today, years later, I am still growing and learning and exploring. And that's what makes art, of any kind, so wonderful. There is no "graduation" or "completion" date. You don't ever come to a point where you say "Ok....I've made it. I've done it all, learned it all and I am finished".

I have so much more to do...and learn
